Charges Are Dropped Against One Worker At Christian School Nine employees of Heartland Christian Academy in Bethel, M criminal counts in child abuse cases By Matthew Franck Of The Post-Dispatch A prosecutor has dropped all child abuse charges a Heartland Christian Academy, a boarding school for wayward youth where nine employees are still facing criminal counts. The scho Rev. Charles Sharpe, went on the offensive at a news conference Friday, accusing investigators of launching a "witch hunt" against t employees. "We believe a terrible atrocity has been committed here," he said. "We just want to put this all behind us." Sharpe is an ir who has spent millions of dollars to build Heartland, a religious community with more than 16,000 acres in Lewis, Shelby and Knox Heartland Christian Academy currently enrolls about 125 wayward youth, many with criminal backgrounds. The school's reliance or punishment has led to abuse allegations. In June, five workers were charged with felony child abuse for allegedly forcing children to a punishment. In August, four workers were charged with excessive paddling of a 16-year-old student. The charges dismissed this w separate incident in which employee Jason Flood was accused of hitting a boy in the ear causing his eardrum to burst. Heartland law affidavit Friday presumably written by the boy in which he takes the blame for the incident and says he was suffering from an ear inf

County prosecutor dismissed the charges this week but could not be reached for comment. Second Judicial Circuit juvenile officer M who helped investigate the charges, would not comment on the matter. In the past, Waddle has said he believes children are unsafe at October, officials from the Division of Family Services raided Heartland and removed its 115 children. Sharpe, who hired a team of resumed operations and won a court injunction against raids. Flood said the criminal charges destroyed his reputation and have kept the youths he loves. "I was a role model to them," he said. "It was like taking a father away from his children." He now will return to school and has already made contact with the boy involved in the incident. Sharpe and two Heartland attorneys at the news conferen in their criticism of law enforcement officials - particularly those in Lewis County. Sharpe has retaliated against the county by movir million of his Sharpe Land and Cattle Co. operations to adjacent Knox County. Sharpe has filed a civil lawsuit against Lewis County damages for temporarily closing the school. Missouri is one of a handful of states that do not require residential religious youth facil to be licensed and regularly inspected. Source: http://www.corpun.com/usr00201.htm
