Build your Family on principles, not hopes

I didn't see how we were supposed to be a family.

Where was I supposed to put the weight of my trust?

Every five minutes my parents changed the rules.

I look back from where I grew up and I remember just picking raspberries and lying out in the garden and being home.

I don't know what happened.

I kept hoping things would change.

If I could just get over this edge.

The FIRST TIME I ever saw my dad cry, it blew me away.

And then this silence:

I saw what he had grown up with.

When my parents brought me through the front gate of Hyde I was kicking and screaming inside.

But gradually I began to transcend my self-absorption.

I let go of a lot.

I reached out to my family.

I got a glimpse of what I am capable of.

I learned to value the truth.

It's the only school I know of that HELPS AN ENTIRE FAMILY
by bringing them to the realization that there is a bigger meaning in life than just one's personal achievements.

Our job at Hyde is to try to make others see this great opportunity—it's not just something to do if things get desperate.

That's the real conundrum... trying to figure out how we can get more people to realize how great an experience it is...
THE EDUCATION, CHARACTER, FAMILY—
those three words are capitalized in what we're talking about.

—Mike Dawes

What is the center of your family?

Is it a person?

When one person holds the focus of a family,
the whole structure collapses.

Crisis.

Do you want to be a real family?

Then go after the truth.

Raise the expectations.

Set your sights high and don't go backwards.

You can repattern what happens.
But it won't come to pass without struggle.

The truth isn't negotiable.

If it's not your issue, don't solve it.

Rebuild your family on principles, not hopes.

Be vulnerable.

Live your principles.

Inspire change.

graduation

"As I look over my past four years at Hyde, I have seen myself achieve goals I never thought possible. I have gotten a glimpse of what I am capable of. I now view myself as a strong, motivated young woman with some direction in life. I don't worry about what the road ahead will be like, because I have learned to value the truth. I hope to hold my own integrity sacred once I pass through these gates."

hyde schools

At most schools, the goal is simple: Teach kids what they need to know to get into college. Strive for high academic standing. Get good test scores. Round out the picture with some varsity sports and community projects.

Works great in theory, but it bypasses a central truth: All kids are different. Abilities, obstacles, inner strengths and family dynamics all play an ongoing part in shaping and defining personal success. What looks good on a test score doesn't necessarily translate into a confident, truthful, intelligent human being operating at his or her fullest potential.

That's where Hyde Schools come in. We believe that school is a very personal proposition and that character development must form the deepest framework for education. Schools that value standardized ability over individual character cheat the student of chances to gain confidence and self-knowledge.

Hyde Schools are college preparatory schools where individual needs, challenges and dreams form the blueprint of education. Here, attitude is valued over aptitude, effort over ability, and character over talent. We have a highly structured curriculum and a demanding code of ethics. We choose students on the basis of their commitment to uncover and nurture their highest potential—whatever that may be.

We ask that entire families take part in this awe-inspiring process of character-based education, believing that parents are essential role models for character. We make a distinction between academics and intellectual development. While we help students learn historical dates and algebraic equations, we also help them filter ideas through their own minds and help them develop moral reasoning. At Hyde, it is more important to "get smart" than to be "born smart."

Athletics, performing arts and community service aren't in the margins of education; they are co-curricular measures of personal achievement. Because Hyde is a place of pushing limits, all students become athletes and performers, academicians and wilderness explorers.

You can't hide from yourself at Hyde. But, if you are willing to do the work, you can find yourself here.

family curriculum

Hyde's character-based education unfolds uniquely for each family. However, without deep parental commitment, most Hyde students won't reach their fullest potential. That is because parents are the greatest teachers and the family is the most influential classroom. To model and inspire character, each member of a Hyde student's family is asked to continually address his or her attitudes, issues, values and deeper purpose in life—just as the students are doing.

To support families in this process, we have created a Family Education Program that helps build committed partnerships between family and school. The program includes a wide base of engagement for parents—both on campus and in their own regions. There are four components to the Family Education Program:

1. Hyde parents attend one three-day seminar at the Family Learning Center on campus, participating in the same kinds of activities and personal reflection as their children. Family Learning Centers are also conducted at the Black Wilderness Preserve.
 2. Regional Meetings of Hyde parents are held monthly in locales across the country, to allow parents to follow the parent curriculum together.
 3. Each year, two weekends are set aside as Family Weekends, a rich, structured opportunity for parents to interact on campus with children, other family members and faculty. A Sibling Program offered during Family Weekend gives young family members a taste of the Hyde experience through arts and hands-on activities.
 4. Regional Retreats are held yearly in each region—providing parents with a relaxed, natural environment to further the personal work they have begun in regional groups.
- It can be a challenging idea to let go of traditional notions of parental responsibility. However, since the Family Education Program began in 1977, countless parents have said that Hyde's family curriculum gave them relief from dead-end patterns of miscommunication and helped them build stronger relationships with their children based on mutual respect and honesty.

two campuses

Hyde operates two private boarding campuses. The original school in Bath, ME was founded in 1966 by educator Joseph Gauld. A second campus, in Woodstock, CT was founded in 1996, in response to a growing demand for Hyde's character-based education. Each campus uniquely reflects the local environment. The academic programming and day-to-day activities that support character education are equally in action at both.

core curriculum

A typical academic program might look like this:

freshman

English 9, Algebra 1, World Cultures, Language 1, Earth Science, Art 1 (photography, video or art)

sophomore

English 10, Geometry, World History, Biology, Language 2, Art 2 (pottery, painting, printmaking)

junior

English 11, Algebra 2, U.S. or Twentieth Century History, Language 3, Chemistry, Philosophy, Art 2 (advanced photography, advanced video)

senior

English 12, Government and World Religions, Calculus, Physics or Advanced Biology, Advanced Language, Philosophy, Advanced Art

AP courses and SAT reviews are offered at both campuses.

curriculum

Character isn't something you develop in isolation. You carry it with you into the classroom, onto the playing field, into the cafeteria. Accordingly, the principles of Hyde's character-based education pervade all pursuits at Hyde. Self-confidence, discipline, motivation and honesty are inspired through a rigorous curriculum of academics, athletics, performing arts, community service and personal development.

Governance at the campuses is based on a student-fueled democracy. Students take responsibility for the performance of their peers as well as themselves. Some of Hyde's most valuable lessons occur in the athletic program, which affords all students the opportunity to participate in competitive sports, regardless of natural ability, in an atmosphere where personal effort and team unity count just as much as winning.

The performing arts program encourages creativity and risk-taking among everyone at Hyde. Each year, faculty and students together audition, rehearse and perform a stage production. Parents also get a moment in the spotlight, performing a short skit for the whole school during Family Weekend.

All students belong to Discovery Groups—small, weekly counseling groups, composed of students from mixed class levels. Facilitated by experienced faculty members, these forums are the place where personal issues are shared and lessons internalized.

Hyde's rigorous curriculum requires students to work together in daily jobs, contributing to some aspect of the school's maintenance. As students witness each other's struggles and victories on a daily basis, a very close-knit community develops.

academics

Students at Hyde don't learn subject matter in a vacuum. We ask kids to bring their deepest selves into the classroom, believing that intellectual growth is connected to the soul's journey. In journal-writing assignments, personal portfolios and collaborative projects, students learn to value their own experiences and those of their classmates as a filter for understanding global ideas.

Learning Enhancement For Academic Development (LEAD) consists of services that offer academic support and skills training in a character-centered learning environment. All LEAD services are tailored to students' individual needs. Students are guided to understand and utilize their learning styles, while also addressing the obstacles that interfere with strong scholastic performance. Specific learning enhancement services include:

- Writing Enhancement, which develops ability to think critically and to communicate clear thinking, using the formal writing skills necessary for high school success and college preparation.

- Math Enhancement—addresses skill deficits that are barriers to academic success in high school mathematics.
- One-On-One Tutoring—develops effective learning strategies.
- Guided Study Hall—promotes study skills, and willingness to ask for help.

Hyde Scholars, Hyde's advanced academic program, provides eligible students with the opportunity to enroll in AP and honors-level courses. Hyde Scholars students learn to think critically, communicate effectively, and develop a strong work ethic—core leadership skills that prepare students for life beyond high school. As key players in the development of their children's character, parents of Hyde Scholars students also enroll in their own program and, like their student, they explore their potential as leaders and learners.

Apart from enrolling in a full range of AP and honors-level courses, Hyde Scholars lead school meetings, assist in planning and leading Hyde's summer school programs and wilderness programs, participate in off-campus lectures, theater, and various cultural events in collegiate environments and pursue independent interests by completing term-long projects with local artists, musicians, scientific labs and museums of history or art.

The Hyde classroom is a unique place. Hyde teachers possess both high academic credentials and a deep fluency in interpersonal dynamics. Passionate and demanding, they bring their honest selves into the classroom, serving as models for both the personal and academic curricula. Our 5-1 student/teacher ratio enables us to individualize each student's program with challenges and benchmarks. Hyde students take a lot of responsibility for what happens in the classroom—organizing tutoring sessions for classmates who are falling behind, evaluating their own work, helping to develop the curricula that will determine their progress through the different class levels. The "we-they" mentality of students at war with teachers simply doesn't exist here.

At least seven hours a day are devoted to academics, including a mandatory two-hour evening study hall. Class sizes are small, personalized and uniquely focused on the potential of each student. Depending on a student's individual academic program, either four or five courses are required per semester.

Starting junior year, students meet regularly with the Director of College Placement to begin shaping the college application process. By senior year, each student has a carefully defined application plan.

Character is inspir not taught

I realized I had a huge ego.

I didn't want any help from anyone.

And then I felt the person on the inside.

THAT WAS HUMBLING.

I realized there's a lot more in me
than the person I portrayed.

I watched my parents hit rock bottom.

They inspired me by pulling through.

I began to see obstacles as opportunities to grow.

Painful, but always leading to a better place.

No matter how dismal things have gotten, deep down I have had the strength to make it.

EVERY SMALL VICTORY

I always had a rebel spirit.

It saved me.

Wrapped in sarcasm, I laughed off my mistakes.

I fought invisible battles of ego and fear.

Surrender came reluctantly.

A dazzling humility to be so exposed

And win

respect.

ed,

I was stuck and I used to say to myself,
"Why am I here?
Why can't I get out of this?"

It's because I did the same thing over and over again.

My desire for instant results made me shortcut my integrity.

If we're going to grow,
we owe each other the work
it's going to take to get there.

I realize this is TOUGH,
the bar keeps getting raised.

We can't help what we're given,
but we can choose what we own.

That's what character is about.

We're going to hold you responsible for your part and you hold us responsible for ours.

I'd never know anything about you if all we ever did was go to the beach.

Sometimes it's the smallest realizations that fill me with awe.

*Character disintegrates
in the smallest ways:*

Sidestepped conflict.

A feeling squelched.

Truth avoided.

Because there isn't enough time or enough of you

or even the words

to insist on what you believe.

And after a while,

you forget what you believe until you're unbelievably tangled.

Retracing your steps to find your beliefs takes COURAGE.

INTEGRITY is something that can be recovered
one piece at a time.

It takes the tough and loving CONCERN of others to bring you back to yourself.

When pride is disarmed, your natural CURIOSITY will take over.

LEADERSHIP flows from a deep sense of life purpose.

"No one ever asked more of me than when I was on the Hyde basketball team. I couldn't understand why everyone expected so much, because I'm not really built for the game. But when I asked the coach to let me leave the team because I didn't believe I had the ability, he wouldn't let me. He made me realize how hard I could work by betting on my potential. That gives me a lot of pride."

athletics

Hyde Schools look at athletics as the perfect laboratory for character development. Since students learn to value best effort over performance, "the bar" is always set higher than what can be accomplished. This ongoing challenge instills a true respect for competition, whether the opponent is a classmate, another school's team, or your toughest challenger—you.

All students participate in competitive athletics, at levels commensurate with their individual abilities and attitudes. In the athletic arena, evaluations are based on effort, team unity and personal achievement, so every athlete has the opportunity to be successful at Hyde.

Personal effort can build tremendous team momentum—we call it "synergy"—as ambition spreads to all participants. It has helped Hyde teams to win state and New England championships in wrestling, basketball, track, cross-country running, soccer and lacrosse.

The underlying philosophy is the same at both Hyde School campuses, with minor differences in sports offerings. The Woodstock, CT campus includes an ice hockey program and martial arts, and the Bath, ME campus offers crew and cross-country skiing. Athletics are scheduled from 3:00–5:00 p.m. each weekday, with competitions usually scheduled on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons.

All students participate in athletics at either a Varsity or Junior Varsity level:

- Football
- Soccer
- Cross-Country Running
- Wrestling
- Basketball
- Hockey
- Dance
- Cross-Country Skiing
- Lacrosse
- Crew
- Tennis
- Track & Field
- Martial Arts

performing arts

Hyde's inspiring Performing Arts Program was one of the first things to put our school on the map. It began in 1976, when Hyde students staged America's Spirit, a salute to the bicentennial. An original portrayal of American history with a message of hope, the show traveled around the country—even playing on Broadway.

Today, the Performing Arts Program takes its cue from the unfolding drama of Hyde families' lives. Each year, students and faculty work together to create an original show, based on the experiences and interests of each group of students. It's a challenging context for overcoming fears and uncovering hidden talents.

Students undertake all aspects of production—from scriptwriting, to lighting design, to choreography, to final performance. They learn to set up and operate lighting and sound equipment. By the time the show is mounted in the spring—usually during Family Weekend—students have spent a full semester in its creation.

Parents get their moment in the spotlight too, creating a short skit that they perform in regional groups for the entire Hyde community during Family Weekend. It's inspiring for kids to watch their parents face the same risks that have characterized their own performing arts experience—and the attempt always brings laughter, mutual respect, and new perspectives.

Among the elective classes that support the Performing Arts Program are modern dance, acting, directing, improvisation and vocal ensemble.

The curriculum also offers classes in the visual arts, including painting, drawing, sculpture and ceramics. In addition to displays of student artwork around campus throughout the year, a community art show and reception are traditionally held during Spring Family Weekend.

"It was incredibly hard for me to get on stage and sing a solo. In my mind, the whole room was spinning. I'll always be proud I did that, but the thing I'll never forget is seeing Dad on stage. If you had told me a year ago that my father would actually do a big show number for 300 people I would have said you were nuts. That's what this place does—it really stretches your ideas about what's possible."

woodstock, connecticut

The Woodstock, Connecticut campus opened in 1996, in response to a growing demand for Hyde's character-based curriculum. The Woodstock campus consists of grades 9–12 and enrolls approximately 220 students.

Situated on the grounds of a former Catholic women's college, the 120-acre campus includes spacious classroom buildings, student union, dining hall, 200-room dormitory facilities, two playing fields and a practice field. A new gymnasium, built in 1998, includes weight and wrestling rooms and basketball courts.

One of the unique features of the Woodstock campus is a state-of-the-art 1,000-seat theater, former home of the New England Opera Company. The Performing Arts Program benefits from the theater's sophistication.

Set in the rolling farmland of northeastern Connecticut, Woodstock is a haven of open fields and peaceful woodlands. The campus is a 1 1/2-hour commute from Boston, Providence or Hartford and only 25 miles from the Sturbridge Village exit of the Massachusetts Turnpike.

bath, maine

The first Hyde School was established in 1966 at the Bath, Maine campus, on the former estate of shipbuilder John S. Hyde. Classrooms and offices are housed in the historic mansion and carriage house, with new dormitories, conference center, student union, recreational activities center and performing arts building nestled around the estate. The campus extends over 145 acres and includes three playing fields, an all-weather track, indoor tennis courts, basketball courts and a gymnasium-field house. The Bath campus consists of grades 9–12 and enrolls approximately 220 students.

Visiting parents can be accommodated at the new Family Learning Center, a beautiful on-campus conference center and dormitory. A spiritual center overlooking the duck pond offers a quiet place for meditation.

The coastal city of Bath, Maine is a 45-minute drive from Portland International Jetport and a 2 1/2 hour drive north of Boston.

summer challenge

Most incoming students participate in an introductory term, called the Hyde Summer Challenge, which builds a personal and academic foundation for the coming year.

Self-confidence, discipline, motivation and honesty are inspired through a variety of hands-on academic and athletic activities. Students unearth their potential while camping, canoeing and hiking. Musical, dance and dramatic performances are interwoven with intensive personal development during peer discovery groups. At the Bath campus, a ropes course lets students push themselves beyond their perceived limits and develop trust in others.

The program concludes during Family Weekend, when parents come to campus to examine family dynamics and set action steps for the future.

wilderness program

The outdoors is the ideal classroom, where lessons of nature allow us to reflect on our own rhythm and process. Exploration of the natural world also offers a challenging backdrop for developing character—perseverance, ingenuity, leadership and courage are all called into play.

Hyde is fortunate to have an outdoor classroom on its 600-acre Black Wilderness Preserve, a pristine tract of Maine woodlands bordering Flagstaff Lake in Eustis. This wilderness area is an important year-round classroom for all Hyde students and their families, a place where groups meet to deepen the work begun on campus. Hyde maintains an educational campus, consisting of a main lodge (with generous kitchen, dining, meeting, and bathroom space) and two bunkhouses. These facilities are located on a spectacular site overlooking Flagstaff Lake and the Bigelow Mountain range.

A fulltime wilderness program staff assists in several kinds of programs:

- Wilderness Family Learning Centers—Offered several times a year, these programs challenge families to gain new perspectives while hiking, camping and canoeing in the wilderness.

- Outpost Programs—These intensive five-day character-building sessions help students focus on priorities and uncover deeper opportunities for emotional growth.
- Adventure Programs—Ambitious treks through some of New England's most beautiful mountains, these programs give small groups of motivated students an unforgettable outdoor challenge.
- Onward is a three- to six-week character-building experience designed to foster readiness in new Hyde students who would benefit from the program, or students who have difficulty meeting the rigors of Hyde's academic and character curriculum. Students enrolled in Onward receive instruction in wilderness living, expedition traveling and participate in physical conditioning, required reading, seminars and journal writing. Students will hike, explore and tackle the waters of some of Maine's rivers and lakes while also exploring and improving their learning attitudes.

All seminars and outdoor adventures are led by trained Hyde staff. Base camp includes a colony of yurts—handmade by Hyde students and faculty—which serve as cozy, rustic accommodations year-round.

Academic power is in your attitude

It seemed to me that school was rigged.

If I couldn't win the game, I'd wreck it.

I got rejected at three schools and I knew at that point it was not Dad's FAULT.

It took me a long time to want to make the effort.

In a weird way,
it was the rebel in me who's now the leader.

I wouldn't have pushed myself
without everyone else.

The deeper I examine myself,
the easier it is to connect to a wider world.

The biggest thing I'll take from this place is that it doesn't matter how smart you are.

What matters is the amount of work you PUT INTO IT.

There are some things I'm probably not going to know.

Maybe purpose comes from the quietest truth.

Academic success doesn't really mean anything if you don't feel smart. Hyde taught me about discipline and pushing myself and getting out of my own way. That's what made me realize how smart I am, and it helped me reach academic goals I never dreamed of.

On the first day,
I see them trying to figure out what they think I want.

After the next few classes,
 most students are fuming

Because the class isn't about me, or even about the subject

IT'S ABOUT THEM

learning how to speak the different languages of thinking, stretching their understanding

a romance with their own minds.

When they experience that spark,
 the soul enters the classroom and true learning begins.

Your academic power is in your attitude, not your aptitude.

Your attitude expresses itself in every gesture.

Excellence can be a chain reaction.

If nothing else,
 you can expect fairness.

Your words stay with me.

Once you know something,
 you can't un-know the truth.

We're all struggling with fear.

I expect more than you think you can ever deliver.

I believe in your best.

Do you know what that feels like?

admissions

Admission to Hyde Schools is based on different principles and practices than you'll find at many college-preparatory schools. We value attitude over aptitude. That's because Hyde's character-based educational process values commitment over academic categories. We seek a diverse body of students who are willing to pursue a total education. This approach will ask you to accept personal responsibility for development of your mind, body and soul. We look for families of sufficient strength to support students in this challenging quest to uncover the very best they can be.

During the admissions process, families visit Hyde for a tour and admissions interview. The interview is a frank and confidential opportunity for families to sit down and discuss family issues, previous school experiences, hopes for the future and issues of personal concern. When the interview concludes, both parents and prospective students are asked to write a paper describing personal goals. This document establishes a commitment to embark on the Hyde process and often serves as an important reference throughout one's tenure at the school.

The final decision is reached by the admissions committee within two weeks of the interview, based on recommendations by the interviewer. Applications are welcomed and interviews are scheduled throughout the year. Interviews for the Summer Challenge at both campuses are usually completed by late spring. Scholarships for the regular academic year programs are offered on the basis of need.
