

Hyde School enrollment grows

BATH — Hyde School has opened for a new academic year with an enrollment increase of nearly 50 percent over last year's abnormally low figure, the school's chief executive officer has reported.

Sunday marked the start of the new year with 140 students enrolled at the private secondary school from 25 states and five foreign countries, Joseph Gauld reported. A total of 130 was planned, he said, but more than expected in the summer school program decided to stay on for the regular academic year.

Still struggling last year to pull itself out of financial difficulties, the school planned for a low 1985-86 enrollment, Gauld said. Only 27 students returned, and the school had a total of 96 students in grades 8 through 12.

Gauld, who founded the school in 1966 and left in 1980, was called back in late 1984 to help the institution out of its difficulties. Now the word is out among guidance counselors around the country that the school is back on the track and under Gauld's overall direction. They again are recommending it to students who could especially benefit from Hyde's character-building program.

Past enrollments have gone as high as 225, but Gauld considers that too high. The peak was reached in 1979, the year before Gauld left. The goal now, he said, is to reach about 180 and hold it there.

As in the past, students' home states are scattered around the country. Only 14 are from Maine. New York claims the largest group, 23. Eight are from California and 13 are from the southeastern states.
