

Hyde Announces Summer School

BATH — Hyde School will open its fifth summer school, registering 50 students from 16 states and two foreign countries June 28.

The program called, "A challenge to the underachiever," was initiated in 1965 by the headmaster, Joseph W. Gauld, to help public school students of recognized potential, who for one reason or another were unable to fulfill their potential.

With the help of public school guidance counselors, mostly in New England, more than 200 of these students have participated in the Hyde summer program over the last four years.
