Aspen Education Group, a provider of therapeutic education to underachieving or struggling young people, has bought SageWalk.

Terms of the sale were not disclosed.

Located in Redmond, SageWalk is a therapeutic wilderness program that serves as a high-impact intervention for troubled teens between the ages of 13 and 17 who may be experiencing emotional, academic or behavioral problems. Using a nature-based setting, SageWalk teaches struggling adolescents ways to improve their communications skills and interpersonal relationships and teaches students to accept responsibility for their actions.

The SageWalk program, established in 1997, has received national attention and recognition for its successful outcomes with young people and their families.

With 32 programs in 11 states, Cerritos, Calif.-based Aspen Education Group is the nation's largest network of therapeutic schools and programs.
