Bromley Brook girls know they are capable of more, but lack the strength of character to achieve their aspirations. They may be depressed, withdrawn or anxious; in need of a structured environment where they receive adult guidance and counseling support while pursuing their high school diploma and developing healthy peer and family relationships. A balanced and integrated approach to facilitating Dr. JoAnn Deak's three C's of competence, confidence and connectedness; Bromley Brook's curriculum offers an opportunity for renewal and stability for today's struggling teenage girl.

Bromley Brook boarding school for girls gives underachieving young women an opportunity to be tomorrow's leaders. We recognize each girl's needs and strengths and teach her to use that self-awareness to achieve more than she thinks possible. Exposure to a challenging college preparatory curriculum and collaboration among faculty, family and referring professionals facilitates competence in education, increase self-knowledge, and improved family relationships. This individual approach to education and personal growth can create unprecedented levels of success among girls who have previously experienced school failure, social isolation of difficulty, and strained family relationships.
