BOOT CAMPS & MILITARY SCHOOLS IN OKLAHOMA

Get Help Today

When your teen's behavior is spiraling out of control, damaging his future and his relationships with others, it may be time to consider therapeutic or alternative boarding schools. But where can you turn for some good advice and a network of resources? Sometimes, help is just a phone call away. At HelpYourTeenNow, we'll work with you over the phone to assess your child's needs and recommend programs in your area. We're a parent advocate group not affiliated with any school or facility. Our goal is to pass on the knowledge and information we've learned the hard way to you to make your family's journey to harmony a success.

Military Schools and Boot Camps Aren't the Best Option for Troubled Teens

Serious teenage issues cannot be resolved with a few weeks at an outdoor boot camp, nor can the strict academic structure of a military school replace therapy. Military schools and boot camps are not capable of offering troubled teens the real help they need. Keeping your teen in a residential facility designed to treat adolescents and staffed with certified professionals is the way to real recovery. Avoid military schools and boot camps, and explore the other options available to families and teens who need help.

Oklahoma Regulatory Laws

For any residential facility to operate legally in the state of Oklahoma, it must be licensed and regulated by the Oklahoma Department of Human Services.

Private schools in Oklahoma do not need to be accredited, but the State Board of Education strongly encourages schools to do so (Okla. Stat. Title 70, §3-104). If the private school is accredited, it must hire certified teachers. Non-accredited schools do not need to comply with this regulation (Okla. Stat. Title 70, §6-189). Up-to-date immunization records are mandatory for all Oklahoma private schools (Okla. Stat. Title 70, §1210.191). A health program for each private school must be written out and available for review (State Regulation 210:35-3-107).
