This is probably going to be the most honest and fair review you will read about Sundown Ranch. I worked at the Ranch for about 10 Months and today was actually my last day. Lets start with the Powers family. Jeff and Leslie are amazing people that really care about the Kids and would do anything for them. They have a spirituality group 2 nights a week and it is optional for the kids that want to go and if not they go to an AA meeting. I have read in other reviews that they try and cram religion down your throat and that is simply not true. I loved working with the kids and most of the staff. There are certain people that are defiantly overbearing and shouldn't be working with kids but for the most part the AC's are good. The Counselors here are amazing and loved working side by side with them. Bev, Cindy, Rachel, and Sam are amazing! Madison is also an amazing Shift Supervisor as well as the daytime AC's. The night shift needs some work and the turnover rate is really high. The cafeteria staff are great and the food is really good. The problem with this place comes from the top. The husband and wife team have been here for 30 years and still have that old comes from the top. The husband and wife team have been here for 30 years and still have that old school approach. The curriculum and rehabilitation style should be updated. This place could be so much better with new leadership. I felt like me and my coworkers didn't have a voice. Employee and clients were called out in front of others and not handled in a professional or constructive way. Some staff would yell at the kids at the top of her lungs and it is very belittling in my opinion. There needs to be a more hands on approach with the kids. Upper Leadership couldn't make up her mind on what the rules were and they seemed to change every week and it was impossible to keep up with. At the end of my employment it was getting out of hand and I felt that it was no longer safe environment. Kids are allowed to talk to staff anyway they wanted, depending what kid it was, with little to no consequences. I really loved my job and working with the kids and if management changed I would go back in a heartbeat.
